NEXT MEETING: May 25, 6:30PM

Maud Taber-Thomas, Judge's Walkthrough of Juried Art Show

Message from the President, Patrick Sieg

Dear Rockville Art League members,

We have nearly completed our 2016 / 2017 season and we should be proud of our accomplishments this year, including the following:

- Our membership has grown to more than 130 members.
- League members are very well represented in venues across Montgomery County.
- The December show was beautiful and I anticipate that the Spring Members' Show will be as well, and perhaps even better.
- We have hosted six informative speakers and our new Program Coordinator, Nighat Ahmed, has a slate of outstanding speakers lined up for the next season.
- We began accepting photographers into our league and their photos into our member shows.
- We have revised our monthly meetings to include an ice-breaker "gentle critique." Thank you to the brave artists who are willing to put themselves out there.

- We have a slate of new board members with new ideas about how we can support our members.

I believe that we can build on this momentum next season and I welcome any ideas and suggestions you may have.

Thank you to member and Certified Picture Framer, Jae Shin, for speaking to the group at our April meeting and a record number of members were present to hear her comments. Personally, I picked up several techniques that will help me frame drawings in a way that is not only efficient but will preserve and showcase my work. A big thank you to Jae.

The Spring Members' Show is nearly upon us. Please support this show with your artwork and by volunteering. Quite a few of you have already signed up to help but there are still volunteer spots to be filled. Later in the newsletter our Juried Member Show coordinator, Lisa Sieg, shares much information on the show. As with other shows the May RAL member meeting will be the walk through with our judge, Maud Taber-Thomas. It will be on Thursday, May 25th and we will meet in the mansion upstairs gallery in room 2.

Finally, I recently saw the following quote by author Kurt Vonnegut: “To practice any art, no matter how well or badly, is a way to make your soul grow. So do it.”

This is a quote that I take to heart and I am glad to “do it” when my paintings are working out and the “grow your soul” helps even when they are not.

I am looking forward to seeing you and your artwork in our spring show later this spring.

Patrick Sieg
RAL President

RAL Juried Members’ Spring Show Glenview Mansion

May 21 - June 28, 2017

Judge: Our judge for the spring show, Maud Taber-Thomas, is an artist who specializes in oil paintings and charcoal drawings. Trained in classical drawing and painting at the New York Academy of Art, Maud studied Victorian and Medieval literature at Bowdoin College and Oxford University before turning her attention more fully to the fine arts. Maud draws inspiration for her evocative portraits, interiors, and landscapes from the narratives and characters of classic literature and history. Her works, which range in scale from miniature to larger than life, capture the vibrant light and color of far-off places and distant time periods. Maud Taber-Thomas lives in Silver Spring, Maryland and teaches drawing and painting classes at the National Gallery of Art and the Yellow Barn Studio at Glen Echo. Her drawings and paintings have been shown at a number of galleries in the Washington, DC area and in New York. Her work is represented by Susan Calloway Fine Arts, in Washington, DC. Her website: <https://maudtaber-thomas.com/>. She will conduct a gallery walk-through on Thursday, May 25, at 6.30 PM.

Critique by Penny Kritt

Critique for Sabiha Iqbal

Our thanks for Sabiha for providing a painting for critique.

On the Run

Oil on Canvas

By Sabiha Iqbal

Doing a critique is always easier, and hopefully more accurate, when you understand the artist's motivation. Look carefully at the image. What was she trying to say? And how did it make you feel?

Sabiha says:

“What I like about the painting is that it shows a lot of movement which is what I wanted. But what I don't like about this painting and most others that I do is that I can't seem to escape from a uniform color in the background. My figures did have many colors but they had the same mix. I have struggled to fix that. I did want to distinguish the lower left half from the top right. My theme is that people are composed of many different colors, in the sense that each one of has a little of all colors, although we may have a dominant one. I was also thinking of refugees, immigrants, and all the rest of us, and all the news I'm reading. Just trying to show people on the go, or on the run, whichever way you take it."

Let's start with what works so well in this composition. Each of the figures is designed with some sort angular or diagonal elements and that is exactly what tells the viewer that these figures are on the move. Some figures are in an exaggerated posture that indicates rushing. (see Inset 1 below). Those distorted stances imply that every figure is somehow imperiled and/or fleeing from something.

Another thing that Sabiha did well was how loosely she shows a crowd without getting bogged down in detail for each figure. She's got enough shapes to indicate a crowd and then a few clearly indicated arms and legs. It tells us all we need to know about these people and how they're all intent on going various places. More information about an individual might have taken our attention away from the general atmosphere that she wanted us to see.

None of them is standing straight up with arms hanging at their sides or sitting with a relaxed posture. Without this kind of contrast, it's easy for the viewer to see desperation, rather than a more peaceful sense that some figures are rushing through their day while others are enjoying the moment.

Inset 1

The sense of peril is amplified by all the red (blood?) in the figures which might indicate that they were fleeing from a violent terrorist attack. While the background is different in the lower left than the upper right, it is mostly just different values of the same color combinations. The dark swirling passage in the upper right might well be smoke from an explosion. The lower left could be the dust that rose from the blast.

If Sabiha's intent for some figures was a more peaceful view of how busy normal days can be, having more contrast in the colors and posture of some figures would be helpful. Because the two bright green figures (Inset 2 below) indicate an adult and child who are strolling at a leisurely pace, they negate an overall sense of panic. There are still some slight diagonals as the figures hold hands and one in the legs of the child, but they indicate a calm connection. The pink figure has the sharper angles like the figures in the background and he's clearly running, but the bright pink color – and the string attached to the kite – all simply portray a child playing. The calmer figures wouldn't have to be done as bright cartoon figures; the exaggeration was for emphasis.

Inset 2

In Inset 3 below, the trees also give a sense of normalcy, even if now the kite has apparently been lost within their branches. Here we see “forest” rather than more well defined individual trees. More detail would have made them too prominent and important instead of just being a calming background shape.

Inset 3

However, if the goal is a darker vision of the chaos and terror of refugees, one solution is to treat one or two figures with more contrast and detail as a clearer definition of what is happening. Inset 4 below has just enough detail to imply a rifle has shot a fleeing man in the back. The addition of two strong black shapes for the helmet and rifle provide both lots of contrast in value (very dark shapes next to much lighter ones). These simple shapes also now explain the reason that the figures are running in disorganized panic. Throwing all subtlety aside, the rifle points to the strong blood red shape on the back of the large figure just to the right.

All the other figures are now almost reduced to being the background, with just enough detail left to show their hysteria. That means that the blue background colors become insignificant and will require no more modification.

Inset 4

Both of the alternatives above are based upon the idea of providing specific kinds of contrast to better explain the situation. In the first one, the bright figures that are clearly enjoying themselves convey the idea that the world is a busy place that is sometimes chaotic. The second, while reinforcing the ideas of conflict and violence, better describes the horror of man’s inhumanity to others.

Not every piece of art needs to make a strong statement. But when it does, the viewer will take away an emotion that may last longer than the visual memory of the composition.
